Obliquity: An examination of refraction.

(compiled by spiros angelaki ii)

If an object is within an enclosed space, and there is no source of light, be that “existing at all” or a matter of some sort of occultation, does it no longer exist in reality simply because it is imperceivable to a potential observer?

If an object is ascribed the ability for reflection, and is granted an opportunity to receive light from an external source, does the object somehow become The Source, even though it is intermediary?

~ Quran, 30:6

An escapative purple, conforming into a deep, tangible, blue.

A subtle hint of green, usually bled over by overencumberant vibrant gold.

The gold quickly tarnishes towards the burning red that encompasses it.

The red is a final stand before the light seems to dissipate into oblivion.

And then, there seems to be no light.

All praise is due to Allah, Lord of the worlds.
